FLAME of the BORDER

A vivid Western tale of romance and border intrigue which will appear in this paper . . . Do not fail to read it.

VINGIE E. ROE (Mrs. Raymond C. Lawton), author of this thrilling story which has its setting on the borderline between Arizona and Old Mexico, knows her West from a lifetime spent in that land which still holds much of the romance of the earlier frontier days. She was born in Kansas but has lived at various points in the West and Southwest and now resides at Napa, Calif

Among the western stories, in addition to "Flame of the Border," which have placed her in the front rank of present-day fiction writers, are "Nameless River," "Primal Lure" and "Heart of Night Wind."

This author has never written a better story than "Flame of the Border." Read it as it is published serially in these columns.

OPENING GAMES PLAYED SUNDAY IN NEW LEAGUE

Alvarado, Pleasanton and Newark Victors In Initial Games

New, white balls, that were quickly muddied on wet diamonds, sailed for the first time Sunday in the new south Alameda County baseball league.

Alvarado, Newark and Pleasanton leaped into the league lead with victories, while Niles, Decoto and Irvington grace the cellar.

The closest contest of the day was played at Irvington, and ended with the only run of the day marked for Pleasanton. J. Anselmo and Peters were the winning battery. Schultz and Pacheco worked effectively for Irvington, allowing only one run. Louis Manuel was umpire.

At Newark, the new Newark Merchants beat Decoto 9 to 8, after getting the scare of their lives in the eighth inning when Decoto rallied from 1 run to 8, to grab the lead. Wilson, who had held the Decoto boys to 5

Muller's Home Run Beats Seattle Sunday

Fred Muller, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. Muller, of Newark, and a former local athlete, proved his value in coast league baseball Sunday when his terrific home-run in the fifth inning brought in three runs for his team, the Oaks, to beat the Seattle Indians.

Muller got three hits in four times at bat, and fielded brilliantly. Muller's home-run was the longest ever seen at the Oakland park.

In the second game of the double-header, Muller got four hits in six tries.

JOHN STEVENSON, PIONEER RESIDENT, SUCCUMBS FRIDAY

Pneumonia Attack Fatal To Member of Old Township Family

John Stevenson, 59, a resident of the Centerville district for more than fifty years, and identified with progressive farm methods here, died at his home Friday after a brief attack of pneumonia. Funeral services were held Monday from the Stevenson home on Central avenue, with a requiem high mass at the Hold Ghost Church, Centerville. The Rev. Father A. De Souza officiated. Entertainment was at the Cypress Hill cemetery, Petaluma, under Botelho direction.

Stevenson, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Stevenson, pioneer couple, was an extensive landholder in the Centerville district. He was the brother of the late Eugene Stevenson and the late Mrs. Carrie Emerson. Both of the latter died within the last few years.

The deceased is survived by his wife and a son, John, Jr., Stanford University student.

There are in addition, two nephews, Harry and Eugene Stevenson, and a niece, Roberta Stevenson, all of this district.

Stevenson was a graduate of local schools, including the old Washington College, at Irvington. He later attended Santa Clara University, and after his graduation took a complete course with the Heald Business College, of San Francisco.

During the past several years, he had been more or less confined to his home, suffering seveer attacks from time to time. In addition to his huge farming interests, he operated a retail meat business in Centerville for a number of years.

Stevenson was a member of the Centerville Lodge, Knights of Pythias, and was affiliated with the Petaluma Lodge of Elks. He was a former member of the Washington Parlor Native Sons.

No Taxes Needed To Pay Interest On Bonds

No special tax was necessary for the Alameda County Water District to pay off the first installment of $10,000 on its 1930 bond issue, recently. Accumulated earnings from the sale of machinery and pipe from the dismantled Alvarado pumping plant of the old East Bay Water Company, were represented in the payment, officials said. Elimination of high salaried officials helped to meet the payment.

A sum of $12,500, necessary to pay interest on the $250,000 bonds issued to purchase the Alvarado pumping rights in 1930, was taken from the $15,000 raised by taxation in the district.

Water rates at Newark have been reduced 12 per cent this year, and hydrant rates at Alvarado, to equalize the charges over the whole district, were reduced this month.

TOMATO ACREAGE IS BEING SIGNED FOR STATE CONTROL

More than 110 members of the Eden-Washington Farm Center gathered at the Washington Union high school Tuesday night to hear an address by Jennings Pierce, Western Farm Home hour radio announcer, and to hear results to date of an effort to sign tomato growers for state prorate-crop-control.

Pierce told of the characters in his broadcast, and related interesting details of station procedure. He sang several songs, some in chorus with five Pleasanton boys, members of the 4H club, who had come to the meeting with Mrs. Casterson and Mrs. Newton, of Pleasanton.

Jean Stuart, announcer for the Farm Bureau homemaking hour, was also a guest speaker.

Music for the evening was furnished by Ed. Kettman, E. Pimental and Vincent Damico.

C. A. Rinderspacher, of Mt. Eden, spoke on new tomato contracts, and gave a forecast of the 1935 season. Reports on progress of petitions for the formulation of a tomato marketing agreement under the California pro rate act were heard from the following: Louis Amaral and A. D. Lewis, Jr., of Centerville; F. Cardoza and Tony Lewis, of Irvington; George Souza, of Warm Springs; Gunther Ripscke, of Newark and W. A. Sloan, of Mission San Jose. Good progress was reported. The petitions request that the California pro rate board have a hearing to determine whether application of the prorate act to California tomatoes would benefit the industry. One of the committee has already signed up over 1500 acres in this district.

Members of the Pleasanton 4H club reported on several of their projects.

Paul Daugherty, secretary of the center, states that the next meeting will be held on the fourth Tuesday in May.

ASSOCIATION WILL VOTE ON PLAN FOR SCHOOL INSPECTION

Centerville Department Fosters System For Fire Prevention

Launched by the Centerville fire department, through Frank Madruga, assistant chief, and president of the Alameda County Firemen's Association, and Chief Fred Rogers, a plan to institute a regular system of inspection for county schools will be voted on tonight when the association meets at the Caliente club, in Oakland.

Designed to place inspection of schools on a specific basis the plan, if approved tonight, will be submitted to District Attorney Earl Warren and the board of supervisors for incorporation into an ordinance. David E. Martin, superintendent of schools, has already signified his approval.

Brought first before the executive board of the association by Rogers and Madruga, the new system has been studied by a committee composed of Chief Riggs, of Hayward, Chief Fred Rogers and Frank Madruga, of Centerville. It has been passed by the executive board and the committee.

The plan calls for a regular inspection of all school buildings, to be made at intervals selected by the association, and according to an instruction sheet drawn up by the Centerville of-

SURVEY FOR NEW BELL RANCH BRIDGE ASSURED

Decoto Juniors Told New Structure to be Built In Next Fiscal Year

Success in their attempt to have the Bell Ranch bridge either repaired or replaced was assured the Decoto Junior Chamber of Commerce Tuesday night, when they received a letter from Burnett Hamilton, county surveyor, stating that he has been authorized to proceed with a survey, and acquisition of property rights, in preparation for the construction of a new bridge within the next fiscal year.

The Decoto group has been working on the problem of the Bell Ranch bridge for some time, declaring it a menace to motorists, and particularly to the school busses.

Among committee reports at the meet was one of the phone rate group, which told of the support of the Niles Chamber of Commerce, the Decoto Chamber, the Decoto fire department, Lions club of Centerville and the Newark Junior Chamber of Commerce.

The next meeting will be held at the Sycamore Inn on May 14, according to Frank Thomas, president. The main business will be installation of officers. Committeemen in charge will be Clarence Freitas, chairman, Vernon Perry and E. Paniagua. A huge banquet will be served.

Cooperation of the Decoto group in the general clean-up week sponsored by the Oakland Junior Chamber of Commerce was voted.

"Tule" Pond Attains Huge Size This Year

The "tule" pond, southwest of Niles, has reached huge proportions after the recent heavy rains. It extends for nearly a half mile along the Niles-Irvington fault line, and is the haven for innumerable wild water fowl. In years of light rainfall, the pond almost disappears. This year it can be seen from the Mission hills, as a broad expanse of water, covering acres of ground east of the Stivers place.

DADS TO BE DINED BY FARMER-SONS TONIGHT

Future Farmers of the Washington Union High school will be hosts to their dads tonight at a huge father-son banquet to be held in the school cafeteria. The menu will be made up for the most part from experimental gardens and plots farmed by the boys, and will be cooked under the supervision of Mrs. Josephine Morris, domestic science teacher. Paul Daugherty, instructor, will assist and advise the young hosts.

Included in the menu will be peas, from experimental plots at Mission San Jose, and new Bliss Triumph potatoes, raised by the embryo farmers. Ice cream will be made from milk brought to the school and separated as a part of the class work. Boys in charge will be: Ray Oliveria, general chairman; Frank George, food preparation; Lorin Godwin, reception and invitation and Isadore Naia, educational program.

During and following the dinner, to which numerous prominent men will be asked, there will be a musical program, and agricultural demonstrations to be given by student speakers.

An inter-class basketball game will wind up the evening.

Three Suffer Slight Injuries In Crash

Three men, not of this district, were severely shaken Friday night, when their car got out of control and overturned near Irvington. The three were Eric Ross and A. Quisenberry, of San Leandro, and D. G. Johnson, of Los Angeles. The latter, more painfully cut than his companions, was taken to a San Jose hospital in the Botelho ambulance.

All will recover.

Playing Politics With Relief Funds

The Roosevelt administration was on untenable ground when it announced through Secretary of the Interior Ickes that it would withdraw relief funds from Louisiana if it should become necessary to deal in their distribution through the political organization of Huey Long.

It is neither good politics nor lofty statesmanship for President Roosevelt to assume that money voted by congress to relieve distress in America become a campaign fund to be dispensed where it will do the most good to win a re-nomination, and later another term. Yet the argument between his secretary of interior and the senator from Louisana can lead to but one conclusion. It reveals to the simplest intellect that any state administration that actively opposes President Roosevelt will be disciplined, and until the pregnant hinges of the knee are bent in fawning before the Roosevelt shrine no federal aid may be expected.

The Huey Long political organization is in control of every department of state government in Louisana. It is incumbent, then, that the federal government deal with him in the administration of relief, as it deals with Governor Merriam in California. Because Long understands it

RICHARD AMYX IS AWARDED ATHENS FELLOWSHIP

Dick A Amyx, 24, son of Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Amyx, formerly of Niles, and now of Hayward, has been awarded a fellowship in classical archeology in the American School of Classical Studies in Athens. There are two fellowships in archeology awarded each year. Fellows are selected by competitive examinations open to students of all American universities. The stipend of the fellowship is $1,300, renewable for a second year without re-examination, at the discretion of the school.

Amyx was graduated from Visalia High school in 1926 and from Stanford University, with honors, in 1930, in classical literature. In 1932 he received his Master's degree in Latin from the University of California and was last fall advanced to candidacy for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, in Latin and classical archeology. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, national scholastic honor society.

In the competition for the fellowships, Amyx was rated first. Following is an extract from the letter announcing the award:

The University of Vermont

March 28, 1935.

My Dear Mr. Amyx:

It gives me the greatest pleasure to inform you that you have been awarded the first fellowship of the school of archeology in the American School of Classical Studies at Athens. I enclose a statement of requirements of the fellowships. At your earliest convenience please write me your acceptance of the fellowship on these terms.

I want to offer you my hearty congratulations. In an unusually large and brilliant competition you were distinctly first, and

TOYON BRANGH WILL HAVE GARDEN FETE ON MAY 25

Plans for a spring garden party, to be held in the gardens of the J. C. Shinn estate, were laid Monday, when the Toyon Branch of the Children's Hospital of Alameda County met at the home of Mrs. J. R. Whipple, chairman. Saturday, May 25, was the date set for the affair.

Committees to work out details of the fete will be named later by Mrs. Whipple. There will be further discussion of the plan at the next regular meeting, to be held at the home of Mrs. Walter Wyatt, at Newark. A special meeting will be called shortly before the date of the party, Mrs. Whipple said.

Members of the group concluded to attend the Mills College horse show on May 17 and 18 this year, but decided to take no part in it. Last year the local branch tended a booth.

During the afternoon Monday, the members continued with work on scrapbooks for children in the hospital.

MUSHROOM STEAK

A mushroom ten inches in diameter was picked on the J. E. Thane place south of Niles last week. The huge fungus is believed to be the largest ever seen in this district. Several lesser mushrooms, ranging in size from five to seven inches, were found at the same spot.

NILES CHAMBER TO BACK DECOTO GROUP FOR RATE REVISION

Vote to Support Try For Elimination of 5-Cent Phone Toll Here

Unanimously approving of an effort to have telephone rates in Washington township revised to eliminate the five-cent toll on calls between the several towns, members of the Niles Chamber of Commerce voted Monday to back the Decoto Junior Chamber of Commerce, proponents of the plan.

The decision was reached after A. J. Petsche, secretary of the Niles civic group, had read a letter from the Decoto organization, calling attention to alleged high cost of phone service here, and asking that the Niles body appoint a committee to confer with other committees on the question. Chamber President E. C. Grau named E. A. Elsworth, H. L. Scott and George Bonde to represent the local organization at meetings to be held in the near future. A suggestion that a speaker be obtained to talk on the subject was not taken up, the opinion of the group being that the matter should be left in the hands of the Decoto Junior Chamber of Commerce. The committeemen will keep the Niles chamber informed as to developments.

Among other communications read, was a letter from the committee on a state police system asking that endorsement of the local body be given the proposed police plan. The letter stated that no new departments would be created but that existing law enforcement agencies would be coordinated in time of need. Captain Coster a guest at the meeting gave a brief talk on the efficiency of the New Jersey state police system with which he is familiar. Pending further study the matter was tabled.

Following a short talk by Warren Hyde, another guest, H. L. Scott reported on the first baseball games in the new south county league, played in the township on Easter Sunday.

President Grau announced that R. B. Blacow will be next speaker.

Niles Girl Figures In Fatal Gun "Joke"

Cecelia Paul, Niles girl, was another at whom David Herman, Oakland youth, had directed one of his "unloaded gun" jokes, it was made known last week, when she hitch-hiked to Oakland to attend the funeral of Frances Fredericks, victim of a similar prank.

Cecelia, who had been visiting with the Fredericks girl, said that in playing the "joke" on her, Herman took the powder out of the cartridge, replaced the lead, then fired the gun at her. There was just enough force in the cartridge primer, to force the lead part way down the barrel. It was this lead that penetrated the Fredericks girl's back, when Herman "played" again on April 14.

The lad has been charged with manslaughter, and his preliminary hearing will be held in a few days.

CHAPTER I

Lone Mesa.

THE girl, clinging to the face of the weathered cliff, her booted feet barely touching the narrow ledge below, was chiefly conscious of the strain upon her wrists. All the pain in the world seemed centered there. She knew that three hundred feet of space hung blue and clear beneath her, that the azure sky cupped serenely above, and still she endured with her mouth set and her dark eyes flaming upward at the face which topped the mesa's rim.

This was a man's face, young and lean and weathered as the land above, a face wild as a hawk's with long blue eyes that watched her painfully.

Moreover, it was a drunken face—or it had been ten minutes ago.

Now it was sobering fast, and there was sweat at its temples.

"Let go with one hand—please—an' catch th' rope," its owner begged, "for th' love of God!"

"Leave God out of it!" the girl panted thinly. "A lot you know about him!"

"Then for your folks, miss. Haven't you got some folks somewhere who'd break their hearts if you—if you—fell?"

"Sure, I have—a brother who'd kill you if he knew."

"I'd give him th' chance. Only catch th' rope. It's a little pull. I'll have you up here in a minute."

"For what?" she asked bitterly.

The man groaned

"For your life—an' your safety."

"You give me your word?"

"Yes. Will you take it?"

"I will. Swing that loop to my other shoulder. I'm left-handed."

With the expert precision of a trained cow hand the man swung the loop around her slim body. With a cat-like sweep of her left hand the girl caught it, let go the bare root of the dead pinon pine stump on the rim which had saved her, and swung clear.

Hand over hand the man raised her the scant ten feet which had separated them and pulled her over the edge of the cliff. Together they rose to their feet and stood looking into each other's eyes with tragic tenseness which precluded speech.

Then the man stooped and picked up the girl's wide hat and timidly held it out to her. She took it without a word, set it on her dark head, brushed the white, sandy sift of the cliff-face from her shirt and riding breeches, and watched him catch her horse and lead it back.

She took her reins and swung up in her saddle, her lips set in a tight line above her firm chin. In that tense silence she leaned to the start, when he caught her horse's bit.

"I—miss," he said thickly, "I want to—to say that I ain't ever felt so bad in my life. I've done a lot of things that wouldn't bear light, but nothin' so bad as this. I never made so big a mistake in judgment in all my days, an' there ain't no excuse I can offer. I just—just didn't know a woman lived who'd rather die than—than—"

"No?" said the girl like a rasp. "You've got a lot to learn, then. Now, get out of my way."

Across the high mesa she went like a streak of flame, her scarlet shirt against the blue sky making a fire in the spirit of the man who stood watching her. When he could no longer hear the sound of her horse's feet sliding in the loose stone silt he stooped and picked up his own hat. For a long time he held it in his two hands, staring at it unseeing.

Down on the sandy levels the girl gave her horse his head and sailed away toward the north and east. Two hours later she rode into the stone-flagged patio of her brother's ranch house and swung off with the last thunder of the iron-shod feet.

"That was a pretty piece of horsemanship, Sonya," said a man's voice; "quite spectacular. How long have you ridden like that?"

"Oh, hello, Rod! Why, I don't know. Ever since I've been in this country, I guess—five years now. It's a land that makes for flights and wide gestures."

"I see. You've been gone an unconscionable time. Where've you been?"

"Over beyond Chee wash. There's a sick woman in a hogan, and I'm afraid she's going to die."

A shadow passed across the girl's face, darkening it for a moment.

"These Indians are so pitiful, Rod, so patient, so hopeless. And they are so poor. They make me fairly question destiny sometimes."

"My darling! Why bother your dear head? What's one Navajo more or less?"

"I wish you wouldn't talk like that, Rod," she said earnestly. "If you knew them like I do you couldn't. They are a lost people, that I grant you, who know they are lost, and they are going down to oblivion like a gallant ship with its sails set and flags flying. You don't understand, Rod."

"No," said the man, getting up and coming toward her, "I don't. Neither do I want to. I only understand that your absurd devotion to them is keeping you from me and from your rightful place in life."

He stooped and kissed her gently.

"Go wash and rest a bit, child," he said; "you look rather fagged. Lila is in the nursery with Babs, and Serge is out on the range somewhere. Said he wouldn't be in till night."

She rose and entered the deep house, a cool place, its walls laid up of flat stones chinked with adobe mud, its bare floors bright with Indian rugs.

Sonya Savarin loved her brother's house, his wife, his child, and himself best of all. For five years she had lived with them in this lone land of cactus, sand, and sunlight, and it seemed as if a hand tugged at her heart whenever she thought of leaving them.

She had thought of that gravely the last year. Of New York and Rodney Blake and all they stood for—convention and affluence and what the world called life. It had been a year, on the nineteenth of next month, since she had promised to marry him. Rod was the soul of gallantry and had made three trips to Arizona in that time, always urging her to come away with him, to give up her work, and always she had put him off a little longer. Not that she wasn't fond of him. Who could fail to be fond of him with his good looks, his smiling good-nature? And he was Serge's closest friend. Dated from college days. But how could she give up her work here among the people whom she had learned to love and who needed her and her skill so badly?

These thoughts passed through her mind as she divested herself of her dusty riding clothes and bathed in the low pool in one corner of her room where the living waters of the spring ran softly through and out under the wall in a pipe. A treasure, this indoor pool. A blessing it would be hard to leave, along with Darkness, her horse, and Lila and little Babs.

Yet she had come near as a breath to leaving them three hours back and had not given them a thought. There had been no thought in her when she flung her body out of the arms of the man who held her and over the edge of Lone Mesa—only the age-old terror of conquest, the high, fierce flare of white-hot fury at defilement which has filled the heart of woman since creation.

She had essayed death as instinctively as she drew her breath, and had done it on the instant. The man, the tall, lean vandal of saddle and spur, who had ridden her down to the mesa's edge and lifted her bodily from Darkness' back, came back in her vision as he had come again and again on the ride home, in the patio with Rod. She could see the long blue eyes of him, wild with inner fire under their sleepy look. They had large pupils under their bronze-colored lashes, and they were fierce and cruel, swift eyes that could change in a second from one vital expression to another.

She had seen them change, instantly, when she looked up after the sliding fall over the rim, the jolting catch of her clutching hands in the pinon roots. From that promising, sleepy wildness to wide shock. Had seen them literally sober themselves from half-drunken dementia to anguished sanity. Strange eyes. Beautiful, even in their beast-like cruelty. There had been no mercy for her in them. A wave of the cold terror of that moment went over her, followed instantly by a burning flush of anger.

"I'll take my pound of flesh from him for this," she told herself through tight lips, "if it takes me the rest of my natural life. If a free citizen of this country can't ride in safety I'll know the reason why."

Then she finished dressing and went out to where Lila, dark Serge's long-haired, golden wife, put the finishing touches on the table for the evening meal. They were a striking foil for each other, Sonya and her sister-in-law, one so tall and dark and vital, full-lipped, full of brow above her dusky eyes, sinuous in her movements, the other small and fragile as a flower, a fair thing to look at, to know. They were close as a hand in its glove, these two.

A tight conspiracy against the crown, Serge sometimes told them smilingly, meaning himself. But it was a conspiracy of love and loyalty and that dear service which only love engenders, and he knew it. It had served him well, for things had not been too easy on the ranch in the sagebrush country where Serge Savarin ran his flocks of sheep, and women can hold up the hands of men when the waters of circumstance become too deep. These two had waded with him, leaning in against his shoulders. Frail Lila had carried his child, too, and Sonya had stood by at its deliverance. That had been three years back, and he knew in his heart that if it hadn't been for their strong courage he'd have given up. But he had been ashamed to quit, and times were better now. The flocks had become herds. He had Indians with them in camps all over the sage.

"Hello, Sonya," said Lila. "How's Two Fingers' wife?"

"Bad," said Sonya. "I'm afraid I'm going to lose her. She's a sweet thing, too, pretty and young. Two babies. The patience of these Indians is pathetic. She whispered to me that if she had to go away, why sorrow? It was the common lot."

"If she dies," said Lila, "what will become of the babies?"

"Two Fingers has a sister over in Long Ruins. Maybe she'd take them. I'd hate to see them go into the school. They're so little and so wild—like baby quail. They need a woman's love, not a routine."

Lila sighed and looked at Babs through the open door.

"This world is hard on children—and women," she said, "and only a man's true love redeems it."

"And here comes one of the crusaders now," said Sonya nodding her black head towards the northern sage. "Serge."

A little later he came in from the back patio, scrubbed and shining, his riding clothes brushed free of the day's sand and dust, his dark face burned by sun and wind.

A handsome man was Serge Savarin, taller than Sonya, showing his Russian blood in the bold contours of his face, the fire in his black eyes, the slowness of his movements.

He kissed Lila with a long kiss, smiled at Sonya.

"Whew!" he said. "Sure is good to get home."

Rodney Blake came in, his hands in the pockets of his plus-fours.

"This is the darnedest family," he complained, grinning. "Here am I, a guest under its roof, and I've twiddled my thumbs all day waiting for it to see I'm around."

"Now, Rod!" said Lila, "is that nice? Haven't Babs and I paid you all the attention possible?"

"Babs! The young autocrat! She's slept most of the time and ignored me the rest. You've done pretty well, Lila, considering the thousand things you've done today about the house, but as for these others, well, I know I should be highly affronted by their indifference. Some day I'm going to be, no kidding."

"Yeah, like h—l you will," said Serge. "Come here, Babs, and sit on daddy's lap for supper."

It was a pleasant meal that followed, and later the small group sat in the big patio watching the twilight march across the mysterious land in unspeakable beauty.

Sonya, resting her head against the long chair's back, sighed in sheer ecstasy of appreciation.

"Tired, dear?" asked Rod tenderly.

Sonya moved and looked at him.

"Tired? Why, no, I'm not tired now," she said.

"Then why the sigh?"

"Oh, I don't know. Just—just drinking in—all this, I guess."

She waved her hands apart, and the gesture compassed the whole lone country with simple eloquence.

The man, smoking, watched her with speculative eyes in which there was a glint of hardness. This country and its problems—they menaced his hope, and he was beginning to hate them with a deep and abiding hatred.

Serge was talking about the bands of his sheep on Bad Land Levels, and Lila was asking this and that question at intervals, and presently Sonya, watching the great stars come out upon the blue heavens, lost the purpose of their words. She was thinking of the woman in the lowly hogan beyong Chee wash, and the dark-faced man who loved her in his silent fashion, and her heart was sad and heavy with her fears for them.

And then, superimposed upon their pathetic tragedy, she saw again the sky beyond Lone Mesa's rim and the wild fair face of a man sobering in bewilderment and anguish. She stirred in her chair, and Rod Blake touched her hand.

"Eh?" she said, startled.

CHAPTER II

Sonya Gets a New Name.

BY EARLY dawn Sonya was up and dressed, her saddlebags replenished with such remedies as she might need for her battle with Old Man Death in the hogan beyond Chee wash. Darkness, full fed and watered, waited patiently in the patio. She stood in the dim kitchen with a cup of coffee in one hand, a hastily made sandwich in the other, and talked lowly to Lila.

"It's going to be a hard day, old dear," she said, "and I may not get back tonight. If I don't, don't worry. I'll be with Two Fingers and the babies and poor Little Moon. If she seems to be going, I'll not leave her."

"No," said Lila, "no, of course not. I know. What shall I tell Rod when he gets up?"

"He knows I'm going—I told him last night—but not that I might stay over. Tell him again how it is with Little Moon—and mention the babies."

"They're just dirty little Navajos to him."

"They're tragic babies, just the same," said Sonya sharply, "and he will have to see it. Well, so long. I'm off."

She set down her empty cup, pulled on her gloves, and went softly out.

She hugged Darkness' nose, which nudged her breast after a little rite that was common between them, and went up his tall side and into her old saddle with the easy grace of a working cow hand.

Far to the south and west Sonya could see Lone Mesa. She loved the great tableland. Times without number she had climbed its steep trail on Darkness, to ride its three-by-five mile top, to sit in the sun beside its ancient pueblo walls with their rotting ladders to stand on its sharp-cut rim and scan the lone world below. Until yesterday nothing had ever disturbed her, nothing disputed her right of way—until yesterday.

At the thought her face flushed red with anger at the man who had ridden her down to the mesa's edge and pulled her from her saddle, his handsome face aflame with rapine. She felt the blood burn along her cheeks. It was resentment she felt, the fierce rage of indignation that anyone or anything should interfere with her freedom and her right to it. Her dark eyes were hot with it, her soft mouth set in a prim line. But the look she gave the mesa as she rode along beneath it was neither fearful nor resigned. It was a look of promise, as if some stubborn thing within her would take her to its lonely heights more often than usual now.

The sun came up as she and Darkness entered the broad mouth of Chee wash with its red sandstone walls, and a little later they came in sight of the hogan of Two Fingers. A round, low habitation of a single room, laid up of flat stones one above another, like flakes of prehistoric dough, it faced the east, as all hogans must. From its central rise a thin thread of smoke ascended. Something caught at Sonya's heart—it was so stark and poor a home, its people so helpless. Two Fingers met her beside the water hole. He was a man of around thirty, weathered like dark leather, his patient face as native to the land as Lone Mesa itself, and there was about him a simple dignity, as there was about the poorest of these Indians. He wore a blue flannel shirt, corduroy pants held by a silver-studded belt, and his hair was long and bound in two neat doubled flares on the back of his head. Though he spoke fair English and had a sizable band of sheep, this manner of wearing his hair stamped him as a "wild buck," one of those who had not yet become entirely civilized. For one thing, Two Fingers did not drink, and for another, he still worshiped his ancient gods. Sonya liked him.

Now she said, "Hello, Two Fingers. How is she this morning?"

"Bad," he said briefly and reached for Darkness' rein.

Sonya swung down and took off her saddlebags.

As she entered the hogan her lips set themselves in a sharp, unconscious line. Bad was right, she thought. There was the smell of death here. She would need to gird her loins today in all truth.

At first the dusky shadows hid the interior from her sight. Then, as her eyes adjusted themselves, she set down her bags and knelt beside the first heap of skins and blankets which lay on the sandy floor.

There were three of these flat beds. In the farther one the two children still slept heavily. In this one Little Moon lay panting with fever, her big black eyes beautiful in the dim light.

"Courage, little mother," Sonya said in Navajo, "I am with you."

The Indian woman smiled, touched her hand with timid fingers.

She took the draught which the other gave her presently, and watched her as she set about cooking oatmeal over the coals of the tiny fire.

This it was which had made Sonya the idol of these poor and silent people, this service of heart and hand which had saved them, literally, from death in many cases. She fought for what sanitation she could produce among them, taught them the importance of proper feeding in fevers, the superiority of mustard plasters over singsongs in pneumonia, and labored generally like a mother with her children.

Now she bathed the hot brown body under the blankets, gave Little Moon the thinned cereal as a drink, waked and washed the children, fed them the rest of the oatmeal, ate two pieces of fried mutton and some crackers with Two Fingers, and stood for a while outside the hogan in the morning sunlight.

She felt wonderful herself, strong and high within, as if she set her body against a wall and could not be backed down. This was the gauge of battle in her, that she knew, the deep determination to win in what she set herself to do, the passionate sympathy and pity which were like a steel blade in her.

She looked up at the high blue sky with its sailing, full white clouds, her mind an attitude of prayer, and turning, lifted the blanket which was the door, and went in.

Two Fingers gathered the babies and made ready to depart, according to her request made a moment back. She wanted the day alone, clear visioned for the crisis, nothing within sight to distract her. The man looked down at the woman on the low bed, holding one child, leading the other, and the woman looked up.

They said nothing.

It might be their last look on earth, their eternal parting, for all they knew, yet there was no outcry, no sign of sorrow, nothing but that deep look. Perhaps nothing more was needed.

Then Two Fingers went away, and the women were alone in the hogan.

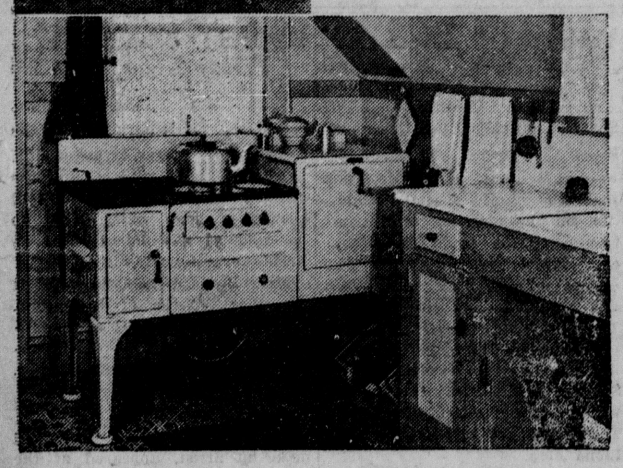
Range and Water Heater with Half-Price Electricity

GIVE DISCOUNT OF $3.58 A MONTH in this Stockton Home

Read this statement by
H. E. CONSTANT
Route 2, Box 164, Stockton



"LAST NOVEMBER I installed an electric range and water heater which were added to my other electric appliances such as a pressure system, radio, electric sewing machine, electric refrigerator, etc.

"In January, 1935, I used 562 KWH., which would have cost me $11.17 under the regular rate. Under the ONE-HALF OFF plan, because my January, 1934, bill was only $4.14—I paid only $7.65. This gave me a saving of $3.52. Again in February, 1935, my bill with the ½ Off discount showed a saving of $3.58.

"During 1934, under the regular rate, my bill for electricity averaged $6.11 per month. Therefore, with the addition of the electric range and water heater, my bill should not average more than $2.50 per month over the monthly bills of 1934."

TAKE ADVANTAGE OF BARGAIN PRICE ELECTRICITY

½ OFF EXTRA Electricity means: When your electric bill in any month of 1935 is greater than your bill for the corresponding month of 1934, at same location, YOU GET A 50% DISCOUNT ON THE DIFFERENCE.

ONE name comes quickly to mind when you think of "The Universal Car." The description is distinctively Ford. No other car is used by so many millions of men and women in every part of the world. Everywhere it is the symbol of faithful service. . . .That has always been a Ford fundamental. Something new is constantly being added in the way of extra value. Each year the Ford has widened its appeal by increasing its usefulness to motorists. . . .Today's Ford V-8 is more than ever "The Universal Car" because it encircles the needs of more people than any other Ford ever built. It reaches out and up into new fields because it has everything you need in a modern automobile. . . . The Ford V-8 combines fine-car performance, comfort, safety and beauty with low first cost and low cost of operation and up-keep. There is no other car like it.

HUSKERS SHUT OUT COLLEGE NINE TUESDAY

Coming back full of vim after a week's vacation the Washington High school Husker baseball nine took the measure of Red Blacow's San Jose State college team Tuesday afternoon. The score was 5 to 0 in favor of Regli's charges.

Unable to solve the delivery of Maderios, who gave them only 2 hits in six innings, the San Jose boys could do no better with Amaral, who took the mound for the Huskers in the last three frames.

The Husker line-up: Silva, c; Mederios and Amaral, p; Dundas, 1b; Laybourne and Kohlmoos, 2b, Rose, 3b; Mune, ss; Hikedo and Dinsmore, lf; Muniz, cf and Amaral rf.

The local nine will travel to Albany tomorrow, to meet the varsity of that school in a game in the afternoon.

LOCAL SPORTSMEN FORM STRIPED BASS CLUB

Enthusiastic Centerville anglers congregated early last week and formed the Washington Township Striped Bass Club. Prizes will be awarded the members at the conclusion of the season on December 16, when each has had his season's catch averaged up. The six highest in poundage will be the winners.

Officers of the new sports unit are: Pete Nunes, president; Robert Francis, secretary and Claremond Secada, treasurer. The group will meet on the first Mondays of each month, at the Du-Rey restaurant.

Among the early advocates of the club, is Captain Theodore Oaks, who is an active member. He estimates that the membership will be more than fifty within a few months.

Battery Count Jails One, Releases Other

Augustino Baregano was sentenced to ten days in the county jail, and Mariana Escanda was given a suspended sentence Friday by Judge Allen G. Norris, when they appeared on a battery charge brought by Frank Guerra, of Alvarado.

Guerra testified that the two had set upon him without provocation, but witnesses stated that the battle came about when Guerra attempted to make off with a jug of wine belonging to the three of them.

Both Baregano and Escanda pleaded guilty.

Firemen Save Building Threatened by Blaze

Centerville firemen were called out Saturday to battle a blaze at the Manuel Faria place, across from the California Dairy, west of Centerville. The fire starting when an oil stove exploded, destroyed a small two-story building.

Another building, immediately across the driveway from the flaming structure, was saved by the smoke-eaters.

Tom Silva Named To Place On Fire Board

The appointment of Tom Silva to the Centerville Board of Fire Commissioners, to fill a vacancy left by the death of P. C. Hansen, former president, has been confirmed by the board of supervisors, it was learned Tuesday. Silva is the second to fill a place left by the passing of members. M. P. Mathiesen was named to succeed A. R. Gronley recently.

Druids Plan to Take Part In Fair Parade

A. E. Alameda has been named chairman of a committee to arrange for participation of the Centerville Druids in the Township Fair parade. His assistants will be Joe Rose, A. E. Francis, Manuel Oliveria and J. S. Furtado.

ficials and aproved by the county and school officials. The sheets, to be placed in the hands of all county fire chiefs, designate the items and places to be inspected regularly. Following each inspection, the board of trustees of the school will be given a copy of the findings with recommendations made by the chief.

Among the items listed for inspection are: hydrants and extinguishers, fire alarm systems, roof and chimneys, attics, class rooms, lockers, closets, exits, corridors, offices, chemistry room, domestic science rooms, manuel training rooms, furnace fixtures, heating systems, shops of all kinds, all wiring and electrical fixtures and plugs, pumping plant, and numerous other points. Efficiency of drills will be tested.

Madruga points out that inspection of schools at the present time is not authorized by law, and is at best haphazard. He states that school fires, although infrequent, may be almost entirely eliminated.

"LIFE BEGINS AT 40" BRINGS GREAT BOOK TO SCREEN

Will Rogers, comedian extraordinary, brings color and life to the screen of the Hayward theater tonight in "Life Begins at 40." Taken from the famous book by that name, this picture is rated as one of Rogers' best. "Society Doctor," with Billie Burke and Chester Morris is on the same program. At Saturday's matinee will be chapter 1 of "The Phantom Empire."

"After Office Hours," a light, hilarious picture, dealing with the private life of a great city editor, features Clark Gable and Constance Bennett on Sunday and Monday. "While the Patient Slept," with Aline MacMahon and Guy Kibbee is an added feature.

Douglas Fairbanks, himself, returns to the screen again, this time in "The Private Life of Don Juan," on Tuesday and Wednesday. On the same bill is "Shadow of a Doubt," with Ricardo Cortez.

AIR CONDITIONED ICE REFRIGERATOR MAKES REFRIGERATION HISTORY

. . . TESTED IN 26,000 CALIFORNIA HOMES . . . .

We wanted to be sure—The laboratory tests convinced us that the refrigeration engineers had achieved a real miracle in refrigerator design—but we wanted to be sure. So we placed these amazing new air-conditioned refrigerators in 26,000 California homes under a guarantee of satisfaction, to check their performance under every-day conditions.

Thousands say, "Absolute Revelation" — Then the comments started to pile in by thousands—"An absolute revelation!" "I never knew foods could be kept so absolutely fresh!" "I keep left-overs for days, and they're still delicious." "Uses 40% less ice than my old refrigerator." — Thus we know that refrigeration science has at last achieved, in these new air-conditioned ice refrigerators, the ultimate in household refrigeration — that makes all other types of refrigeration obsolete.

TEST IT YOURSELF at our risk

Before you buy any refrigerator, test our new air-conditioned ice refrigerator in your own kitchen. Phone, or ask your ice man and one will be delivered to you for a 10 days' free trial without obligation. Liberal allowance on your old ice or mechanical refrigerator.

Auto-Suggestion

Auto-suggestion is suggestion conveyed to the individual without external intervention. Auto-suggestion may be voluntary or involuntary. The subject may, by concentrating his thoughts upon a certain line of action, induce that action, or he may unconsciously act upon suggestions started in his consciousness by others; that is, he may start in himself a train of thought which originated from some other mind. The latter is closely related to hypnotism.

Hens Have Pip on Tongue

Pip is the result of the drying of the membrane of the mouth, particularly the covering of the tongue. A hard, opaque deposit accumulates along the edges and on the surface of the bird's tongue. The dried epidermis may partly separate from the sensitive tissues and form a hard shell which remains attached to the extremity of the tongue, interfering with its natural functions while eating. To cut or tear this substance from the tongue is both cruel and injurious.

VIKINGS FIRST OF ARCTIC EXPLORERS

New Evidence Changes Accepted Ideas of Northmen.

Washington.—Swedish archeologists are changing usually accepted ideas of the Vikings. Evidence dug from the sandy shores of the Baltic sea proves they were peaceful merchants, pushing their trade from London to the Bosporus. Gone is the traditional Viking of English history—a savage warrior who spent all his time dashing across the seas in an open boat, raiding peaceful communities.

The trouble, archeology now indicates, is that reliance has been placed on biased sources of information. British, Irish, and Frankish chroniclers could hardly be expected to appreciate the finer qualities of the "blond beasts" who conquered them.

"For an accurate picture of the Viking age one must go to the sagas, that great mass of legend, history, poetry, and law collected from oral tradition and written down in the Twelfth century," says the National Geographic society. "Archeologists exploring the lost civilizations of Greenland, Scandinavia, Russia, and the Baltic are succeeding in verifying much of this valuable source of material.

Altered World Geography.

"Geography made the Vikings a sea-faring people, and they in turn altered the geography of their world. Early settlements in Scandinavia were built along the coast where deep, winding fjords made overland travel next to impossible. The sea was a natural highway and ships were built to ride the storms of northern latitudes. These boats were small, less than 80 feet long, with high carved prow and stern, a square-rigged sail of brightly colored wool, and 20 to 30 sets of oars. King Canute's 'long ship' boasted 120 oarsmen, but this was a royal exception.

"In these slender craft, steering by sun, moon, stars and wind, the Northmen dared unknown seas and incredible distances. Boats were as speedy as they were seaworthy, making the trip from Norway to Iceland in four days, and from Denmark to England in three.

"The Vikings were a hardy, adventurous race, and their fatalistic religion made them fearless. Life was a dangerous game wherein one strove to win as much fame and honor as possible in the short time allotted by the Norns (the Fates). Games, contests, and feats of strength were tremendously popular. Many are the tales told of Olaf Tryggvason, the king of Norway who challenged Kjarten of Iceland to a swimming match. Olaf had a ship, 'Long Serpent,' the mightiest boat in the North. It is said he could walk completely around this while his men were rowing, stepping on each oar and juggling three daggers as he went!

First Arctic Explorers.

"The history of Arctic exploration begins with the Vikings, who found and lost a northern empire. Around the North cape and into the White sea they sailed in search of furs and ivory. Venturing westward, Rabna Flohi came to Iceland. There a group of noblemen, escaping unjust taxation under Harold Haarfager, established a colony. From Iceland Eric the Red pushed on to a land of black rock and glittering ice which he named Greenland to encourage men to settle there. The Greenland colonies prospered and grew rich through three centuries, trading in furs, ivory, walrus hide, and whale oil. Then as they had risen so they faded, and by the Fourteenth century had vanished, forgotten save in the sagas. The sagas tell also of Leif Ericsson's voyge to Vinland and how he found first a land of flat stones, then a wooded shore, and last a country of vines and grapes.

"The story of Viking exploration in the East is less familiar. Swedish traders ventured farther nd farther along the great rivers of Russia until they reached the Black sea and the Caspian sea. Fortified trading posts were built in Latvia, Lithuania, East Prussia and Russia. A favorite route was up the River Neva to Lake Ladoga, along the Volkhov to Lake Ilmen, and then down the Dneiper to the Black sea. A Viking dominion was established around Lake Ladoga and Novgorod. It was founded by Rurik and his band of Rodslagen, or Russ—enlisted sea warriors of the Baltic coast. So Russia owes her name to Viking traders.

"Thousands of foreign coins from Arabia, Germany, France, England, and the Byzantine empire have been unearthed in Scandinavia, proving the wide reach of Viking commerce. More than half of these coins have been found in Gotland, a little island in the Baltic directly in the path of the great east-west trade route. Recently a vessel of Buddhistic design was discovered there.

Editorial Comment

NORMAN H. PARKS, Publisher Register

to be his right and duty to carry on a guerilla warfare with the Roosevelt policies, and some Roosevelt cabinet members, that fact should have no adverse influence upon his state, when it is well known the country has been assured that relief administration is to be strictly non-partisan.

It is a fact—an indisputable fact—that Roosevelt is showing an inclination to reward his friends and punish his enemies with the staggering appropriation voted by congress for the relief of men and women, not for the relief of parties! A fund to feed the hungry — not fatten campaign chests. Money to clothe the destitute—not array his friends in the robes of despots. It is neither right nor law that the followers of his enemies starve and go naked while the adherents of his regime sit at the banquet table.

Indeed, it has oft been repeated, and aptly, that in these times to make a campaign football of human misery is the meanest of political tricks.

Well We May Console Ourselves

In his campaign of intimidation against the California legislature, William Randolph Hearst, powerful through a metropolitan chain of newspapers, and marvelously rich through the inheritance of an almost inexhaustable supply of rich gold ore in the generation-old Homestake mine in the Black Hills of South Dakota, has seen fit to dangle before the eyes of horrified Californians the certain departure from our midst of noted authors and Hollywood screen celebrities if the proposed state income tax becomes law.

The threatened penalty for exercising our sovereign right is something to appal us—indeed something to stay the legislative hand, and hush the legislative voice.

Terrible as the threatened punishment seems to be, yet it might be worse. We may well console ourselves with the thought that at least Marian Davies will not leave the state, income tax or no income tax.

UP BOBS "CHRISTIAN."

While the legislature was battling over the confirmation of a Merriam appointee, one Porter, bygone mayor of Los Angeles, it might have been well for that body to have looked into the record of his teammate on the same board, commission, or what ever it was. The name of ex-State Senator Christian, of Hayward, is something to shy at.

While the cognomen "Christian" as here spelled is not so familiar to the oldtimer, nevertheless he will guess who is meant.

The gentleman from our neighboring city distinguished himself by being one of three who voted against the child labor legislation, now the law of California. Among the reactionaries who have broken into the California state senate, none has filled the heart of the Tories with more downright satisfaction than Christian.

It is to be hoped that the duties into which the man will soon be inducted will offer little opportunity to do harm. In comparison to a Porter, whom we know at least by reputation, it would be better a thousand times to have a dozen like him connected with the state government than a single Christian. The name is politically odious in this part of California.

Broodiness Inherited

Broodiness is a very variable character, with no "average" time of occurrence. Late spring and summer are the natural periods of broodiness, but artificial methods of rearing have made the desire to rear their young a matter of uncertain occurrence, according to an authority in the Rural New Yorker. The tendency to broodiness is to a certain extent an inherited factor, and some breeds are more inclined to frequent returns of that period than others. Individual birds in all breeds also exhibit great differences in this respect. Weeding out the frequent sitters is practiced by poultry men in order to avoid transmission of the trait.

Young Chicks May Be Fed Oversupply of Minerals

There is such a thing as overfeeding young chicks on minerals, and that is just as bad as underfeeding. The rather strange thing, however, is that an excessive supply of minerals manifests itself in much the same manenr as when too little mineral matter is supplied. A mash containing the usual percentage of meat scraps or meat and bone meal and dry skim milk, according to tests at the Ohio experiment station, carries plenty of mineral matter for chicks until they are ten weeks old.

These tests are in accord with results obtained at other stations, and may therefore be considered as quite reliable. Most scraps are very rich in calcium, carrying from 20 to 25 per cent of that element, which normally makes up three-quarters of the minerals of the mash of chickens. Dry skim milk carries about 10 per cent of phosphorus and calcium in a very digestible form. When one substitutes part vegetable protein for meat scraps in the mash, it is highly desirable to feed additional minerals, as the vegetable proteins do not contain as much mineral matter as the animal proteins.

FUNERAL SATURDAY FOR IRVINGTON SUICIDE

Funeral services were held from the Berge Mortuary, at Irvington, Saturday for James Percy Robinson, 50, who shot and killed himself in the woodshed back of his home at Irvington last Wednesday morning.

Robinson's body was found by his wife, Mrs. Frances Robinson, when she rushed out to investigate the shot. She discovered the body with the gun beside it. She is said to have declared that her husband had not been himself of late. He had been drinking rather heavily, it is reported. A note, scrawled on the back of several checks, found in Robinson's pockets, asked that the death be called accidental, for the sake of the ten-year-old Robinson boy, James.

Robinson, who had been manager of the Standard Oil plant at Irvington for a number of years, was well-known throughout the district. He was employed by the same company at San Jose at the time of death.

In addition to his wife and son, James, two sisters, both of San Francisco, survive him.

RESIDENTS OF HOME ENJOY COMPLETE EASTER SERVICE

Arranged by Mrs. Eliza Felter, leader and pianist, the regular choir at the Masonic Home, Decoto, presented a special program of music on Easter Sunday. Mrs. Virginia Lord, head nurse at the home; Miss Lambert and Miss Swanson, soloists, and Isadore Franck, violinist, assisted. Mrs. Alice McDowell was in charge of the decorations.

For the opening number, Franck played "The Angels Serenade" with Mrs. Felter at the piano. Included in a list of songs was a duet by Mrs. Lord and Miss Swanson. The scripture selection, by Superintendent Hartman, was from the 20th chapter of St. John. Hartman also gave a reading, "Easter, New Life and New Hope".

At the close of the service, Superintendent Hartman, by request of Vesper Lodge, No. 84, of Red Bluff, John M. Moore, master, presented E. B. North with a grand lodge fifty year button. North, who received his Master Mason degree in 1884, at Table Mountain Lodge, in Butte county, came to the Decoto home in 1929.

The funeral of John S. Cowan, of Morgan Hill lodge, who entered the home in 1928, was held at Hayward Saturday afternoon. Masonic rites were carried out by D. A. Gildersee and a delegation of twelve Masons from the home. Interment was in the Cypress cemetery. Mrs. Lord sang, accompanied by Mrs. Felter at the organ.

Next Sunday afternoon, the Santa Cruz lodge will give a play at the Decoto home. Members of the lodge at Fresno will be on hand to present Anders Bangs with a fifty year grand lodge button. The latter ceremony will be a private one.

Nell Myers' Work In New Anthology

Nell Farrington Myers, Niles writer, rose another notch toward literary success recently, when it became known that some of her verse is appearing in the Anthology of Magazine Verse, for 1934.

Edited by W. C. King, and published by the Pacbar Company, the volume is compiled from verse chosen from leading American periodicals. Mrs. Myers' poem, "Autumn In California," which appeared in the October 20 issue of the art magazine, Los Angeles Saturday Night, was one selected.

Mrs. Myers has received a complimentary copy of the book.
